The artist Christo, who is known for his huge fabric fence installations and fabric-wrapped landmark buildings is a well-known practitioner of this type of art. When I cracked the pages of Curating Worship by Jonny Baker, I was stunned to realize how this type of installation artwork has been incorporated into the Emergent way of designing worship. Curating worship, according to both books, is the use of unusual settings, technology & large scale props to provide an environment for public ...

I just got my copy of The Art of Curating Worship and am enjoying it. Curation of worship is an approach to worship planning on a human scale. The author avoids both the "everything the Church has ever done is wrong" and the "Apply my model as I apply it and you'll get my results" extremes that I sometimes find in "Emerging Church" books.
